

Introduction

- Do you ever get to wondering whether anything in life is dependable?
- Do you look back over the things that have happened to you and wonder that nothing seems to last forever?
  - during my childhood we lived in Tranent, but my parents are from Glasgow
  - we would go through to visit relatives, and on every trip as we passed through mum & dad would almost inevitably comment on something or other that had changed since their childhood!
  - notably the whole area round Charing Cross that now has a huge great motorway through the middle of it!!
- Even in the few months I've been here in Dundee I'm conscious of that:
  - aerial shots of Fintry as it was being built in the vestry drawer!!
  - Jenny Farquharson, Fintry Mains, remembering picking tatties in the field where her house now stands!!
  - Linlathen High School
  - big flats in Whitfield behind Longhaugh School are being cleared ready for demolition...
- Not just places that change, either:
  - friends you knew have moved on, moved away; (when I went to University no-one from my school came to Edinburgh, and I basically lost touch with all my school friends)
  - relatives who have died, perhaps grand-parents or parents, or even siblings...
- Even our own lives, we come to realise, are limited and unreliable.
  - health, energy, fitness, mobility...
- Can anything be relied upon? Is anyone worth leaning on? Is anyone worth trusting or committing oneself to?
- The Psalmist says "YES!"
  - but only God is worth dependable, not anything of this earth!

God is: Dependable

- Psalmist uses three pictures to get his message about God's reliability across...
- The first image is tied up with the solidity of the created order:
  - there is some ambiguity as to whether the hills are potentially a source of shelter or of threat!
  - is the thought that the Psalmist might be thinking of fleeing to the hills as a place of safety, hiding there amongst the rocks?
  - or is the thought that from the hills might come danger...?
- Hard to be sure, but where he is sure to get help from is clear!
  - from the Lord, the maker of the hills, the maker of the whole earth!
- There is something about hills that puts humanity in its place:
  - whether its scaling a peak out in the wilds and looking down on the world around, getting a sense of the scale and majesty of the world;
  - or whether its the glimpse of hill from closer at hand
  - Arthur's Seat in Edinburgh, Ochils from our bedroom window in Motherwell, Sidlaws at the back of Dundee...
- To the ancient mind, someone like the Psalmist, the hills stood for all that was dependable, solid, immovable.
  - they had no concept of geology, plate tectonics, erosion!
  - only that towns, nations, kings, civilisations come and go, but the hills around are solid and reliable.

- God is the same:
  - doesn't change - get up this morning & feel grumpy!
  - so can be relied upon!

God is: Alert

- Second picture Psalmist uses is of God as a watchman.
  - a while back I was disturbed to hear that lighthouse keepers have been largely replaced by computers
    - for all I'm a computer geek, I don't find this a comforting thought!!
- Alert watchmen who looked out for danger and warned shipping.
- God is a watchman who never sleeps, never misses anything.
  - nothing can happen to us without God being there, watching over us!

God is: Protector

- Final picture Psalmist uses is of God as a shade and protection.
- Palestine is hot in the day, but can be cold at night.
- Sun beats down, can't stay out in it... need a shade to protect you.
- At night, temperature plummets - need something to keep you warm.
  - pictured as the moon being an evil force.
- God is like that - exactly protecting us from that which threatens us.
- Not maybe meaning we don't have any troubles:
  - just need to come to the prayer meeting and hear the needs that are shared to know that!
  - but protecting the most important thing, our life in him.

Conclusion

- So, the Psalmist concludes - lift your eyes up to God.
- Rely on him, always, for he is reliable.
  - dependable;
  - alert;
  - protector.
- That's one thing that stands behind our ability to approach God in worship:
  - we come to a God who is not fickle
  - indeed, we come to a God who is dependable, but not obdurate like a rock
  - rather we come to a God who is reliable like the best of best friends
- And praise him!
